

The idea behind this chart is to help you narrow down what type of foam core insert would be ideal for your particular situation. It maps out which foam is ideal for what kind of environment.

Spa cover recommendation chart

Taper	Density	Ideal usage
4-2 	1lb.	For those whose tub is under a gazebo, deck, or other protective structure, it is easy to get away with this entry level cover. Not recommended for any tub that is large, receives snowloads or has other objects of mass finding its way on top (dogs, children, etc).
4-2 	1.5 lb.	This is considered a high density spa cover. It is the right step towards getting something that will last through what nature has in store. It will handle medium amounts of load, and should last as long as it is taken care of.
4-2 	2 lb.	Great for just about any condition! The 2 lb. density foam is night and day difference when compared to 1 lb. foam. Ideal for large tubs, and even better for small tubs! Be at peace knowing that besides abuse and neglect, this cover will last!
 special 5-3 	1lb.	Energy concious consumer's like the 5-3 upgrade. This will be a bit stronger than 4-2 1lb. foam, and comparable to the 4-2 1.5 lb. upgrade. This will offer more heat retention for your tub.
 special 5-3* 	1.5 lb.*	Best of both worlds. Thicker and more dense! This is the type of cover that can really protect your family, your investment (tub), and your pets. It will start out noticeably heavier than the others but should last so much longer! *Considered our Northwest special.
 special 5-3* 	2 lb.*	Recommended for everybody with an outdoor tub (especially big ones) but ideal for those who are not home for the weekend that it snows a foot or more. Ideal for those with mountain cabins at the resorts. *Considered our Northwest Special.

Note: These recommendations are subjective to tub size vs. individual treatment of the spa cover.

Spalidz.com spa covers are compatible with most aftermarket lifts. If you have questions concerning your lift versus our cover, please give us a call at 1-888-543-4772.

Spa covers made simple